1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the
 2. various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown
 3. that the most reliable method is the one which involves the
 4. measurement of the change in concentration of the reactants or
 5. products. This method is applicable to all reactions, but it is
 6. often difficult to apply to reactions which are very fast or very
 7. slow. In such cases, other methods, such as the use of a
 8. clock reaction, may be employed. The clock reaction is a
 9. reaction which proceeds very rapidly, and the time taken for the 10. reaction to reach a certain point can be measured. This time is
 11. proportional to the rate of reaction. The use of a clock reaction
 12. is particularly useful for the determination of the rate of
 13. reaction in the case of reactions which are very fast or very
 14. slow. The rate of reaction can also be determined by the
 15. measurement of the change in volume of the reaction mixture.
 16. This method is applicable to reactions which involve a change
 17. in the number of moles of gas. The rate of reaction is
 18. proportional to the change in volume. The use of this method
 19. is particularly useful for the determination of the rate of
 20. reaction in the case of reactions which involve a change in
 21. the number of moles of gas. The rate of reaction can also be
 22. determined by the measurement of the change in color of the
 23. reaction mixture. This method is applicable to reactions which
 24. involve a change in color. The rate of reaction is proportional
 25. to the change in color. The use of this method is particularly
 26. useful for the determination of the rate of reaction in the case
 27. of reactions which involve a change in color. The rate of
 28. reaction can also be determined by the measurement of the
 29. change in pH of the reaction mixture. This method is applicable
 30. to reactions which involve a change in pH. The rate of reaction
 31. is proportional to the change in pH. The use of this method
 32. is particularly useful for the determination of the rate of
 33. reaction in the case of reactions which involve a change in
 34. pH. The rate of reaction can also be determined by the
 35. measurement of the change in conductivity of the reaction
 36. mixture. This method is applicable to reactions which involve
 37. a change in conductivity. The rate of reaction is proportional
 38. to the change in conductivity. The use of this method is
 39. particularly useful for the determination of the rate of reaction
 40. in the case of reactions which involve a change in conductivity.

Subject: Territories withdrawn from Metropolitan Water District.

Dear Mr. Arnold:

When properties are withdrawn from the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, the property is excluded from this district but we are advised that the property by statute is liable for bond and indebtedness liabilities of the district as it existed at the time of withdrawal.

To enable the County Auditor to extend this statutory levy upon the property in the area that is withdrawn from the Metropolitan Water District, it is necessary that we identify the property on the Assessor's Map Book and the Assessment Roll. We will therefore show "Metropolitan Water District I L O" as one of the districts affecting the property. The abbreviation "I L O" stands for "Indebtedness Levies Only." We will show this entry on the Assessor's Map Book and the Assessment Roll.

In the case of the territory detached from the City of Los Angeles and annexed to the City of San Fernando as the Weightman's Addition, and the territory excluded from the City of Los Angeles and annexed to the City of Culver City as McManus Addition #1, we shall show, as one of the districts "Metropolitan Water District I L O No. 1." Subsequent territory will be given an identifying number by the Assessor.

We will set up a file on these territories and furnish the County Surveyor, County Auditor and the Metropolitan Water District an explanation as to the particular areas that are referred to by these I L O identification numbers.

Very truly yours,
